and Park yesterday afternoon and re forced to bow in humble submism to the majesty of the law. In vain sion to the majesty of the law. In vain did their constituents cheer them on and in vair did the pulse-feelers straggle for supremacy, for it was a hopeless fight. The attorneys, when once they stepped upon the diamond, developed into veritable giants of strength and agility, and Judge Minor, the manager of their team, well knowing that triumph awaited him, chuckled in ghoulish glee as he saw them sprinting upon the arena. Six hundred or more persons witnessed the base-ball contest, which would certainly have been a revelation to any professional player, for it abounded in exhibitions of athletic skill and ball-room grace. Boores of pretty girls watched the attorneys and medicine-men, and clapped their little hands and smiled and looked as sweet as possible when the clapped their little hands and smiled and looked as sweet as possible when the mighty athletes accomplished feats that pleased them. Joseph Taylor, a prospective physician, who caught for the doctors, especially delighted the fair ones, and his fawn-like movements and see-saw trousers constantly attracted the gaze of the spectators.

The uniforms of both nines were exceedingly pretty, and while, of course, ceedingly pretty, and while, of course, the individual charms of several of the the individual charms of several of the players added to the beauty of their garments, every man looked as nice as possible. All of the players wore Knickerbocker trousers, and while this attire was somewhat shocking to some of the more sensitive dispositions, every man selected his hosiery with the utmost care. The doctors wore red stockings, and it was the reddest red that the dyer's art could produce. It was their original purpose to have all the colors of the rainbow embodied in their suits; but this was found impracticable, and so they contented themselves with the vermillon hosiery and caps of canary-bird yellow while their trousers and shirts were of immaculate white.

The attorneys likewise wore white uniforms and stockings and caps of blue. CHARGED BY COLONEL STERN.

Just before the hour for the game to commence the eighteen handsome young athletes grouped themselves in front of the south end of the grandstand and Colonel Jo. Lane Stern announced that he and a well-known doctor had been invited to deliver the "charges" to the players, but as the players and the said was from the World Simply read several telegrams which had been received by Judge Minor. The first he said was from the Prince o Wales, and read as follows: "London, June 9, 1892.

"Mamma wants me to go to bed (you know it is now 11 o'clock over there). I never could sleep while any sort of game was going on, you know. Telegraph me the result at your expense. Give my kindest regards to Allan Potts. I see a great deal of his Uncle Jack.

"The last telegram, my friends, is signed Sitting Bull. This illustrious personage of the Great West left us some time since, I believe. His message some time since, I conever. Its message is not dated, nor is there anything to tell from what country it comes. The corner, however, has been singed off. The telegram reads:

"All the lawyers here feel a warm interest in the game. Sirring Bull." In conclusion the Colonel expressed regret that the orator chosen by the doctors was not present, "but," he added, "I reckon they are well represented in all of these places." He then told the players to go ahead in i "amuse the women and children."

THE DENTIST IN THE BOX. Wythe Davis, a young dentist of this city, occupied the responsible position of pitcher for the doctors, but either the beauty of his surroundings or the short-ness of his pants seemed to dazzle him, for he had a wistful look on his face and frequently hurled the leather in the di-rection of Manchester instead of over the home plate. In the early part of the game several energetic individuals undertook to keep account of the num-ber of men who got their bases on balls off him, but the task was a much bigger one than they expected. Some-where about the second or third inning Wythe concluded that tooth-pulling was Wythe concluded that tooth-pulling was far preterable to putching, and so he went on first, and Dr. William Mathews took his place in the box. milion stockings and canary-bird cap, suggested a cigar-store Indian.

"Billy" soon realized that the labor connected with his position was too great, so he went back to his original place on first, while Davis bobbed up serenely in the box again. But that same "tired" feeling manifested itself anew, and before the contest terminated Lafferty took his place.

Joe Taylor, encased in a pair of trousers which either belonged to his little brother or his grandfather (for there was at least eight inches difference in the respective legs of the garment), supported the various pitchers of the physiciams in fine form. Considering the amount of attention he bestowed upon those pants, his work behind the bat was inexpressibly superh.

Major W. Kirkwood Mathews pitched the lawyers, and he was ever so much seed with his work and also with his try clothes. Once a little dirt got on trousers, and so the handsome his neck, caught in splendid shape for the lawyers.

Dr. Oppenhimer, the President of the Board of Health, who played short-stop for the physicians, made up his mind before the game commenced that he was going to make the number of his errors correspond with the number of deaths during the past week, and he succeeded admirably in his purpose. Measure Potts and Maury did some excellent baserunning and diamond-work for the attorneys, while Drs. Hinchman and hisegel also played well. Dr. Dunn would have done beautifully in left field had any opportunities presented themselves, but they did not, and so his light was hidden under a bushel. His manogany-colored whiskers were much admired as they sparkled in left field, and he was frequently seen to reproach the winds for unwonted familiarity with his hiraute appendage.

THE OPENING ROUND.

THE OPENING ROUND. The game opened a few minutes after 430 o'clock, with the attorneys at the bat. They made one wun in the first inning and were greatly encouraged. When the doctors' turn came Taylor went to the bat. He hit the ball with a tanible or transite or t terrible swipe-

"And the crowd set up a howl,
And the players set up a shout,
And the pretty girl in the grand-stan asked.
'Does that put the umpire out?'"

Does that put the umpire out?"

But it was a base-hit, and the medicine-men started out so auspiciously that they made four runs. In the next inning the lawyers added one to their list, while the doctors were shut out. The attorneys began to revive in the third inning, and from that time on they piled up runs until it almost took a book-keeper to tally them. The game was a burleaque on the national sport, but everyone enjoyed it immensely and the spectators were well amused. It consumed nearly three bours, and even then only eight innings were played. only eight innings were played.

at 12 o'clock M., the VALUABLE FARM abore referred to, situated in Henrico county, on the cast side of the Mechanicsvile turopice, upon which it has a long front, extending back to the Chickahominy river and containing 899 At RES, more or less, entracing, besides the evolution highland, a quantity of Chickahominy regrounds, a large area of the finest truck lands, and a sufficiency of woodland.

The buildings consist of a dwelling with the usual out-buildings and some other settlements, such as tenants' houses, &c.

There are few estates combining more elements of value than this. In the first place, it is a large estate very near to the city of fitchmond, on an excellent road, and embrang some of the best trucking land in the rount, the soil being similar to that of the notel vegatable section of Hanover county. Then, as in its nearness to a growing city, such as fitchmond now is, justifies the tope of a very slaredy increased value in a few very; and sgain, it is add to contain inexhaustible quantities of the very finest clay for pottery, fire-brick, tillag, &c.

Specimens of ware burned out of the class.

Specimens of ware burned out of the chabove reterred to are in possession of colon Robert F. Morriss, who will doubtless be glad: Robert F. Morriss, who was usually show them.

I can confidently recommend this proper the farmer, manufacturer, and special promising fine returns in the finest ristance.

This property will be offered first in more sub-divisions, as shown on a plat in James T. Hedd & Sons, to be seen at the the auctioneer and on the premises on v of sale, and then as a whole, and the james the produces the largest aggregate property of the other.
